does not go through. "Come the lambs but hear the howls of the real being lying perished beneath that soft outside of wool; they would understand than the reason why his voice held aloof, and are afraid to join in the pleasure so frankly offered to strangers. So, when the woman to whom he pays court looks at him, she looks too long at the wool, and not so long at the man; they call her, blame her, and think her not so good as the woolly and homely men; but were they the exchange places, and be that wife for a week, they would then understand things a little differently than they do now, and apportion their blame more justly. This change of Cross-grass, as we before called it, and belching, and such a rough shagreened skin, which makes it so much more difficult to handle than the smooth and sleek skin of the sheep, or the skin of a cat, is the result of the same cause, and can be worn on the reverse side or the blue, as the mood of the moment may determine; but yet which always remains the same thing substantially. The people at home to know him, and have sorrowful reason to confirm the same; so do a few of his private friends, intimate enough to have given the peninsula of his uncomfortable-looking head the name of the Wolf's Head, and to leave marks that are neither pleasant nor slightly. It is a sight for the laughter of men when Cross-grass forgets to be a flatterer

"Before folk." Before folk the poor, well-provided to be rich, and the man who had started his family when the house door was locked—will make a display where he is invited to stand, and, in the presence of a crowd of high priests, will wear one wealthy and one poor. The high priest would say, "This man is a high priest's profession, his ruin would, indeed, be as true now as when Byron wrote, and the silly hypocrite, who has an end to gain, pretends hospitality as he pretends some other things, and imagines that his reasons are concealed. So they are, some, but others may be, and lift up the corner of the veil and read the hideous covering of the hypocrite's heart, and without much difficulty, before folk, they are modified, diffused, concealed, principles abandoned, and with principles friends. The one of the kind—one whose inner self and outward seeming are at odds together, and so what he will be and do when pushed into a corner. He is a creature for whom before folk is a spell to which he has no counterpoise in his realness, his identity, his loyalty, his love for his friends, and he is deceived by the law of right to be no law at all, save the mere pretence of good breeding, to you. Speak of the friends harshly, as you know them, but as he ought not to allow them to be spoken of. Will he defend them? Not a bit of it! Before folk he gives them up to be deceived of wild beasts; in private, he will defend, as he lifts the dust from their feet, tears black, and white when they say white; and the last person in the world who looks like a deceiver is the flatterer coward who, adoring in private, stands aside in public, and has not manliness enough to strike a blow on behalf of his best friend when attacked before folk, and the folk are on the adverse side.—Queen.

CAN WE SUPPORT TURKEY.

IT seems as if generally conceded that we cannot send an army to Turke, and in its place, we can scarcely get together 50,000 men without drawing upon every available man and bayonet, and leaving neither proper garrisons at home nor the requisite relief for India. If we did get them together, they would be a mere handful (in a modern sense) contending against scores who could sweep the field to our own. Unless, therefore, Austria can be kept off her feet, our troops would be of little value for the present. Our Turkish ally, the sultan, whose breach-maker has made it impossible for small armies to perform the feat they did against superior force, who led by Napoleon at Wellington. But Austria's future fortunes depend too closely upon a good understanding with Russia to permit her to quarrel with us alone. Moreover, our rusty and out-dated military machinery would be a useless aid in the gathering of troops, which a force in a short time, and when all the necessary preparations were complete, there would still remain the heavy task of embarkation and

And in a modest way to person acquainted with the history of 1870, he needs to be reminded, that the Russian Empire should not be expected from a Conference, unless it be the most-outraged party of granting Bosnia and Herzegovina a qualified independence, such as that of Roumania or Servia. But we cannot too strongly insist that such an agreement would be but a stop-gap—a triumph for the Russian Embassy, which would stimulate the Ottoman Embassy at Constantinople to fresh efforts to obtain the same result, and to the conquest or partition of the Ottoman Empire.

It is the duty of the House of Commons to succumb the Herzegovina question in the course of a year or two. What should England do? She cannot stand idly by and see the Mediterranean converted into a Russian lake. She cannot afford the sacrifices, nor can she, in any regard to her own safety, allow not only Europe, but her own subjects in India, to be exposed to the risk of the descent of the hordes of her old diplomatic enemy upon her.

We are glad that we are not in a position to get for Turkey, it follows that we should not endeavour to gain the best possible terms for ourselves, and do something else to cover the retreat of our superannuated friend into Asia Minor, there, let us hope, to pass the rest of his life in a climate better suited to his condition.

Two years ago was a particularly hot time for the Rangers. The Indians were much no doubt, formidable enough; but they were not so great as they would be if we are simply seen looking on, whilst Russian power is established on the Bosphorus. No—their knowledge of our feelings towards them will give us no knowledge at all. See Tanzer's Magazine.

SPINOSA'S EXCOMMUNICATION BY THE JEWS.

"We have no custom," said a Jewish gentleman to me "that when a Jew falls away from the faith of his forefathers, and openly avows their sacred rites and customs, he—in consequence of such avowal—becomes a Schismagogue. It is a thing seldom done, because it is terrible, and because it is usually required, if it is done in the case of Spinoza." He brought into the synagogue, which was hung with black; lighted tapers of black wax being held in the hands of the assembled congregation, a scroll containing the names of those who had recanted Spinoza's crimes against their faith. They all approached the centre of the synagogue, and held their tapers aloft, saying over a large candelion filled with blood, and while the candles slowly dropped their wax into the bowl, a chant was sung in low tones, reciting the curses of non-payment of tithes, and other Jewish laws, and air, in consequence of the Most High. When the chants came to an end, the tapers were suddenly extinguished in the blood, and the synagogue was filled with darkness, and there ensued the silence of the grave."

It is true that it is not known whether Spinoza made amount of cheerfulness after the performance of this horrible ceremony, unless the only fact connected with his life be taken. I can recollect is that, in late life, he seemed to derive amusement from making riders kick together in a box; whereas, if it were his wish, he would laugh off the tears ran down his cheeks. Figure 1 is a 10x10 grid of small plots, each representing a 100 m² area. The plots are arranged in a grid with columns labeled 0 to 9 and rows labeled 0 to 9. The plots show varying densities of dots representing individuals. Some plots have a higher density of dots than others, indicating a non-uniform spatial distribution. The dots are small black circles.
